Is What Humans Do Natural?
5-9 April 2010, University of Georgia, Athens

Invitation to Participate

Dear Sir/Madam:

The United States Regional Association of the International Association for Landscape Ecology (US IALE) will hold its twenty-fifth anniversary symposium 5-9 April 2010 at the University of Georgia, Athens. We invite you to join us as an exhibitor or sponsor for this celebration. This symposium will attract over four hundred educators, researchers, and practitioners within fields such as aesthetics, architecture, anthropology, conservation biology, ecology, geography, geology, forestry, historical preservation, and resource management dedicated to the design, preservation, and protection of sustaining landscapes.

The University of Georgia, Athens, and surrounding communities are located in the Piedmont region of North Georgia. This area is one of the fastest growing regions in the United States. The Eugene P. Odum School of Ecology at the University of Georgia is the first stand-alone school of ecology in the United States. The University of Georgia, a member of the Southeastern Conference, is the flagship university in the State of Georgia. Athens is a community recognized for its historical significance and contemporary cultural contribution. This complex, diversified, and vital regional landscape provides an ideal environment for the twenty-fifth annual meeting of US-IALE.

As hosts of this anniversary celebration, we welcome exhibitors, participating during this symposium, to introduce publications and materials relevant to sustaining landscapes from many areas of study.

Attached please find exhibitor information and registration form. For program information related to the 2010 anniversary celebration symposium visit www.usiale.org. We look forward to interacting with you.

Sincerely,

Gary W. Barrett
